Description

Background:
People on our network use Citrix XenApp to connect to other locations.
Citrix XenApp uses TCP ports 1494 2598 8443 and uses the windows proxy settings, therefore these ports must be added to the squid configuration.

The attached patch adds two new fields in the squid config:
acl safeports - This is a space-separated list of "safe ports" in addition to the already defined list
acl sslports - This is a space-separated list of ports to allow SSL "CONNECT" in addition to the already defined list

One problem with what you have:

squid_resync_nac() which contains your change:

$settings = $config['installedpackages']['squid']['config'][0]; /* squidnac does not exist */

squidnac does exist, but only if you have settings on the Access Control tab of squid, which is handled in squid_nac.xml - where these settings should probably go.

Can you try to make the changes there instead, and restore that line to its previous reference to 'squidnac' instead of 'squid' so it doesn't break the other settings on the access control tab.

Thanks!

OK. I moved the options to the AC page.

Of course, again, I upload the wrong files.
Please wait...

This is the correct one.
The SSH program I use to copy the files from my pfSense dev box to my regular computer sometimes caches the old versions of the files, I really should check them every time before uploading.
