Description

Pages have their title displayed twice right next to each other, which is redundant and chews up screen space unnecessarily. Like the attached, with "Advanced: System Tunables", and "System / Advanced: System Tunables" underneath.

I think it'd be fine to remove the first, large instance and leave the second as-is.

The second line contains the breadcrumbs (how we got here)

A better solution might be to style the breadcrumbs using a smaller font and a distinctive color to make their meaning more obvious, while taking up less space?

#2 - 11/18/2015 03:04 PM - Chris Buechler

Is there any situation in which the page title isn't contained in the breadcrumbs?

check out the dark theme, I hid the first line and made the breadcrumbs a larger font. This is the reason I want the breadcrumbs on the dashboard, because the styling breaks there.

Note: As long as the HTML is consistent, this can be done with CSS and left up to the "theme designer" incase someone else wants to make a theme that is different.

- Tracker changed from Bug to Todo

- Assignee set to Jared Dillard

Breadcrumbs are now generated on index.php allowing their display to be controlled by CSS.

Re-assigning to JDillard.
